

Title UNDERSTANDING MOTORCYCLE ACCIDENTS

Were you traveling the highways of Colorado on your motorcycle when a negligent or reckless driver crashed into you? Motorcycle accidents are some of the most devastating forms of vehicle collisions out there, with some estimates stating that upwards of 80% of all motorcyclists suffer some form of injury during a crash.

Common forms of injuries sustained by the motorcycle rider in a collision are:

- Traumatic brain injury (TBI)
- Spinal cord damage (paralysis)
- Disfigurement (road rash)
- Broken bones

With nothing but a helmet protecting a motorcyclist in a motorcycle accident, wrongful death is an all too common consequence.

Even a motorcycle accident that occurs at a relatively slow speed may cause major damage to the motorcycle, the rider or both. Treating such injuries and repairing the destruction can be expensive, especially if prolonged rehabilitation sessions are required to get you back on your feet again.

However, the initial offer from the liable party's insurance company might not be enough to take care of you, especially since extensive injuries can require expensive treatments.

Some of the damages that can be recovered from a motorcycle accident personal injury claim include:

- All medical bills
- Any vehicle repairs or replacement
- Lost or diminished income
- Emotional trauma

At The Vaughn Law Offices, we believe that taking the responsible party to court for what they have done is the right thing to do. Not only can we pursue compensation for you and your family, but the lawsuit may bring attention to the problem of negligence on the road, preventing future crashes from happening.
