

UNDERSTANDING SPINAL CORD INJURIES

The spine is the main highway the brain uses to communicate with the rest of the body, and any damage to this area can have devastating effects. While mild spinal cord injuries can result in muscle spasms or partial loss of feeling, more severe damage can cause you to completely lose function in your limbs and confine you to a wheelchair for the rest of your life.

Spinal cord injuries can result from:

- Car accidents
- Truck accidents
- Motorcycle accidents
- Slip and fall accidents
- Dangerous products
- Medical malpractice
- Construction accidents

In many cases, injuries of this nature result from accidents caused by another party's negligence. If it can be proven that your injuries were caused by another party's careless actions, you may be able to file a claim in pursuit of compensation for your medical bills, rehabilitation costs, lost wages, lost earning potential, pain and suffering.

If your injuries were the result of a work-related accident, you may be able to receive financial reimbursement under your employer's workers' compensation insurance.

If a spinal cord injury has robbed you of your mobility and bodily function or put you in dire financial straits due to medical expenses and inability to work, you should consult with a personal injury attorney to determine if you have grounds for a lawsuit.
